Spelman College
A Choice to Change the World
A Spelman education goes beyond the student to everyone that she touches.
Parent donors and student donors also did their part to make this a banner fundraising year at Spelman. Parents gave in record numbers, as did current undergraduates. Some 60 percent of seniors participated in the The Senior Legacy Gift program in honor of their graduation year, receiving a Spelman blue commemorative tassel that they proudly displayed during the Founders Day convocation.

Faculty and staff added to the year’s fundraising successes by increasing their number of donors almost 7 percent and increasing the number of dollars by almost 21 percent. I am happy to share that including alumnae employees, this group can boast an overall participation of 50 percent in 2009–2010.

All of these gifts allow Spelman College to offer more global engagement opportunities, enhanced research experiences, and additional career-related internships to our students. They expand service learning and community engagement for the women on our campus with the world nearby and across oceans.

We have a well-rounded base of support from dedicated alumnae, supportive parents, inspired students, and committed friends, foundations, and corporate funders, and therefore, I am confident that we can meet our campaign goals. We will continue to strive to make the best Spelman because we owe it to the smart and talented students who choose to come to our campus. Collectively, our efforts endeavor to expand the Spelman legacy.

We could do none of this without you.

With sincere thanks,

Beverly Daniel Tatum, Ph.D.
President, Spelman College
It started with one, blossomed to 10, and now has passed its original goal of $100,000.

The 10 at 10 initiative—kick-started by Celeste Watkins-Hayes, Ph.D., C’96—has garnered the support of more than 10 alumnae who have given $10,000 each to support Spelman College’s Women’s Research and Resource Center. The women behind the effort now number 14 and counting. Together they have helped put the Women’s Center on its way of meeting a $1 million challenge grant from the Ford Foundation.

An associate professor at Northwestern University and a member of Spelman’s Board of Trustees and the National Advisory Board of its Women’s Center, Dr. Watkins-Hayes joined with her husband to make the first $10,000 gift. She then reached out to former classmates to see if they would join her. “Part of my goal was to encourage more recent graduates to get into the mindset of giving significant amounts to our alma mater,” she says.

It turned out to be an easy sell. Jamila Hunter, C’96, vice president of comedy development for ABC, especially wanted to support the Women’s Center’s Digital Moving Image Salon. Others wanted to support the center’s mission to guide young women to become activists.

The 10 at 10 alumnae are activists themselves, including an attorney for the U.S. Department of Labor, a judge in Ohio, a vice president of global philanthropy at JP Morgan Chase, and a high-ranking executive at Hallmark Cards.

Where does Dr. Watkins-Hayes hope the 10 at 10 initiative will go? “I want to see how far we can grow this network and influence the philanthropy of Spelman women.”
“I’m glad to see this gift go even further with matching funds from companies like Hallmark.”
—Tara J. Centeio

“I’d like to do anything I can that supports students interested in pursuing jobs as filmmakers and storytellers in the media.”
—Jamila Hunter

“My family has a tradition of supporting HBCUs, and the 10 at 10 program gives me a chance to give back to Spelman.”

As a two-term former mayor of Atlanta, Shirley Franklin took on the city’s toughest challenges, from aging sewer infrastructure to government credibility, and the policies and programs she enacted while in office will continue to shape Atlanta for years to come. The same is true at Spelman College, where Franklin is a 2010 William and Camille Cosby Endowed Professor.
Only now instead of infrastructure or politics, she is spreading her influence to Spelman students who will carry her impact throughout their lives.

“'To do anything worth doing, you need to think long-range, not 10 years, but 50 years,'” said Franklin. “That goes against the usual tendency of politicians who focus on what they can accomplish in a four- or eight-year term. But if you worry about what you’ll accomplish in four years, you’re not going to be successful. Instead you need to begin with the end in mind.”

One of the long-range projects that Franklin championed as mayor was the Atlanta Beltline. Inspired by the thesis of a graduate student at Georgia Tech, the Beltline project will bring together 45 communities by connecting 22 miles of a historic rail corridor around Atlanta. The creation of multiuse parks, green spaces, and transit promises to enhance the quality of life of Atlantans and promote economic activity and sustainable development.

Before committing to the project, Franklin did her homework. She commissioned a feasibility study to see if such a large-scale effort was even possible. After all, it would be the largest redevelopment project ever undertaken in the city and one of the largest urban redevelopment initiatives in the nation. When the study affirmed the potential for success, Franklin formed a steering committee and later a partnership to prepare the way with organization and tax incentives to encourage the development.

As a Cosby chair, which is funded by a $20 million gift the Cosbys made to Spelman in 1987, Franklin is bringing the lessons she learned in the mayor’s office to the Spelman campus. She has taught from the nitty gritty of how to organize a political campaign to the big picture of mobilizing a community to get behind water infrastructure improvements. This semester, she is co-teaching an interdisciplinary seminar on the Atlanta Beltline, which introduces students to the project’s players, plans, and issues and encourages them to pursue original research that may help inform the project going forward. Among other aspects, the class is exploring the Beltline’s impact on race, class and gender issues; how gentrification is affecting surrounding communities; the role of the environmental justice movement on the Beltline; and the Beltline’s implications for national policy making.

Franklin is no stranger to the classroom. She started her career as a sociology and political science teacher at Talladega College in Alabama in 1969. When she came to Atlanta to work for the city’s first African American mayor, Maynard Jackson, as the commissioner of Cultural Affairs, she immediately felt a kinship with Spelman, having herself attended an all-girls high school in Philadelphia. She served on Spelman’s Board of Trustees until she began her successful run for public office.

Now at another place in her career, Franklin says the transition to college professor is a dream job. She wants to continue her work of empowering women, believing that “if you educate a woman, you educate a family.” She is embracing the chance to reflect, write, and engage with young people to not only share what she’s learned in her many years of public service but also learn from them.

One of her lessons comes from history. The fundamental pillars of Atlanta today—transportation, hospitality, education and research—grew from seeds that were planted in the 1880s and 1890s, Franklin says. Around that time, Atlanta established a cluster of universities, including Spelman College, and city leaders drew up policies for land use and strategies for economic development that created the infrastructure that grew into today’s city.

Franklin believes that the Beltline can have an equal or greater impact to that of Atlanta’s historical founders. She doesn’t mind that it will take decades to be fully realized. She quoted a favorite saying: “The true meaning of life is to plant trees, under whose shade you do not expect to sit.”

Franklin is intent on sowing rather than harvesting. What seeds is she planting at Spelman? “I want my students to know that there are a million ways to contribute,” she said. “Everyone can have an impact, whether in the public or the private sector. But they need to understand that what they are learning is relevant.”
Alison Bernstein is no stranger to protest. As an undergraduate at Vassar College, she was among those who marched after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

She became involved in campus politics, drawing attention to problems she thought the college was ignoring—including urban issues and minority disparities. In graduate school at Columbia University, she was surrounded by like-minded people who were drawing attention to the need for academic diversity, an expanded curriculum beyond the white male-dominated canon, and broadening university access to all students.

At the Ford Foundation, which Dr. Bernstein joined as a program officer in 1982, she continued to push boundaries, cultivating a faculty and supporting programs that rethought curricula in terms of race, class and gender. She developed a fellowship program for people of color to attend graduate schools and subsequently join college and university faculties. She was responsible for grant making in education and scholarship, media, arts and culture, religion, and reproductive health and rights in the United States and regional offices in Asia, Africa, and Latin America. As a 2010 William and Camille Cosby Endowed Professor at Spelman, which is funded by a $20 million gift the Cosbys made to the College in 1987, Dr. Bernstein was recently named director of the Institute for Women’s Leadership and professor of history at Rutgers University.

In fact, it was at Ford where she first became familiar with Spelman. She funded an early program of the College’s Women’s Research and Resource Center to develop a curriculum around women’s access to education (the WRRC currently has a $1 million matching grant from Ford). Historically Black colleges and universities have made progress in broadening programs since Bernstein made that first grant, but she deems that progress “spotty. For every step forward, there have been two steps back, often because of budget issues,” she said.

At Spelman, Bernstein is again raising questions of diversity and social justice on campus. She is offering the College’s first seminar on Native American Women in the 20th century—the subject of her 1991 book and a microcosm of a course she taught on American Indians at Princeton University in the 1990s. The first week of classes, students examined [and debunked] images of Pocohontas portrayed in popular culture. By the end of the seminar, Dr. Bernstein wants her students to understand how women have formed the backbone of the Indian political resurgence and cultural renaissance in the decades after WWII.

In addition to teaching and holding public events to raise awareness about Native American issues, Dr. Bernstein is “eager to help people at Spelman understand philanthropy. Philanthropy is at its best a catalyst for progressive change,” she said. “It is often called ‘society’s passing gear,’ which means it can be a catalyst for deep social change. So much of academic history has left out certain groups of people.” She includes Native Americans and African Americans in those groups.

Bernstein is not just giving lessons to the Spelman community but also learning a few herself. Living in a campus dormitory, she said, “I learn from students every day,” she said, “how they deal with complex problems, how eager they are to learn, how they are open to a different point of view.”

“Philanthropy is at its best a catalyst for progressive change. It is often called ‘society’s passing gear,’ which means it can be a catalyst for deep social change.”
The closest that Dannieka Wiggins, C’2013, had ever come to fundraising was selling candy bars in middle school for a field trip. But after the devastating earthquake in Haiti on January 12, 2010, Wiggins launched into full philanthropic mode.

Everywhere she went on campus, students were talking about one thing: they wanted to help. Wiggins found a way that fit the students’ budgets and was reliable. She piggy-backed on the efforts of Pastor Shawn King at Courageous Church in Atlanta, who was running a tent drive for the displaced Haitians.

The English major drew on her public relations experience as a program assistant in Spelman’s Communications Office to spread the word on campus. She sent out e-blasts, made posters, spoke with student organizations, reached out to friends in the dorms, and sent messages on Facebook to advertise the drive.

Students responded eagerly and to date, have donated and shipped tents to house 25 Haitians. And the effort goes on. “The more tents we can send, the better,” said Wiggins. “The rainy season is just finished, and many of the original tents are starting to wear out.”

Recently Wiggins was recognized as one of Georgia’s 2010 “20 under 20,” an awards program sponsored by 21st Century Leaders and announced in the Atlanta Business Chronicle. The 20 student winners represent leaders who have organized an initiative that makes an impact on the greater community. With the public acknowledgment, Wiggins is encouraged to continue fundraising for causes that need help. “I know I can do it,” she said.
In the Wake

Professor Helps Mitigate Environmental Disasters

In the wake of big oil spills such as the BP disaster in the Gulf of Mexico, Victor Ibeanusi thinks small—microscopically small. While many have focused on the harm done to sea birds, fish, and other creatures, Spelman’s chair of environmental science is looking at the harm done to the microbes that are the building blocks of all life.

Dr. Ibeanusi’s laboratory at Spelman has developed a patented microbial system that has been successful in breaking down toxic metals and volatile organic compounds, similar to those associated with crude oil. With support from the U.S. Army Research Office, he and his students have shown the system is effective in breaking down munitions waste. Likewise, they have proven that it works in removing metals from a coal pile runoff in water at the Savannah River site near Aiken, South Carolina.

Currently Dr. Ibeanusi is working with students on cleaning up a million-barrel oil spill in Michigan. When a pipeline near Marshall broke, it spilled oil first into Battle Creek and then the Kalamazoo River, threatening aquatic life in the Great Lakes. But working with the Superfund Division of the EPA’s Region 5, Dr. Ibeanusi and the Spelman students have a chance to break it up before it causes more harm.

And their impact doesn’t stop there. Inspired by their hands-on work in the Spelman lab, several students are pursuing an environmental focus in graduate studies, while others have enrolled in medical school. They are considering the big and the small in enhancing life.

Founders Day

Alumnae donors to Spelman College made history on April 11, 2010. In response to the Founders Day Challenge, more than 830 online gifts totaling upwards of $60,000 were made on the 129th anniversary of the founding of the College.

This sum was the highest amount of online gifts ever made to Spelman in a single day and the second highest amount raised in one day.

When the Founders Day Challenge was announced in March, the total number of alumnae donors for the 2009–2010 fiscal year was about 1,500. Reaching 5,000 alumnae donors by April 11, 2010, would result in a $300,000 gift to the College from an anonymous contributor. This opportunity became an urgent call to action.

Alumnae responded in droves, informing their sisters about the challenge. The message went viral via e-mail and social media websites like Facebook and Twitter. The Founders Day website featured a donor roll call, a bar graph to chart the progress, and an opportunity for alumnae to share their giving testimonies.

By April 11, 2010, more than 3,800 alumnae joined the initial 1,500 in making gifts to the College within the six-week campaign period, surpassing the 5,000 donor goal by more than 300. Their support brought the total number of alumnae donors for fiscal year 2010 to 5,825, increasing the participation rate to 39 percent.

The immediate response by alumnae to the Founders Day Challenge is a testament to the strong bonds created by the enduring chain of sisterhood among Spelman women.

Alumnae Giving by Class

The alumnae of Spelman College reached a record 39 percent participation rate, giving more than $1.3 million from July 1, 2009, to June 30, 2010.
During Reunion, the senior class takes part in the March through the Alumnae Arch to symbolize graduating from college and moving into greater service. Honoring this tradition, Spelman alumnae precede the senior class through the arch.

Alumnae celebrated the anniversaries of their graduation from Spelman College by making significant gifts. Total giving for Reunion 2010 was $583,340 as of May 14, 2010.

Class gift presentations and the announcement of winners of the Alumnae Philanthropy Achievement awards were made during the culminating event of the Reunion week celebration.

The Class of 1970 received the award for the Outstanding Cumulative Class Gift (highest four-year total giving) with a contribution of $311,200. The Class of 1960 was recognized for presenting the Outstanding Reunion Class Gift of $130,530. The Class of 1965 received the award for the Highest Class Participation (71.4 percent).

Special recognition was given to the top members of Reunion classes with the most consistent giving for the most number of years. While there was a seven-way tie for alumnae who had given for 21 years, Beverly Ingrid Sinclair, C’75, was recognized for the most consistent giving for the longest period of time—22 consecutive years.

They come from a broad range of majors—political science, child development, international relations. They aspire to a wide range of careers—psychologist, lawyer, teacher, filmmaker. They come from around the country—New York, Maryland, Wisconsin, Texas, Georgia. They are all Spelman recipients of the President’s Safety Net Scholarship, supported by many donors, including The Coca-Cola Company, which made a generous $1.2 million gift in 2010.

The scholarships provide tuition assistance to students who struggle to stay in school because of depleted economic resources. This year, 82 percent of the student body at Spelman College qualified for federal financial aid, and the gift from Coca-Cola allowed 234 students to meet their tuition shortfall.

One recipient, a Ft. Washington, Maryland, senior who tutors at a local elementary school and mentors refugee children from several countries, says that “my matriculation through Spelman has afforded me the opportunity to reach beyond what I believed was my capacity to achieve.”

Another, a senior majoring in international studies from Oakland, California, has learned “there are infinite ways to achieve success. Through my network and sisterhood, I have raised myself to a higher standard, and I know that I am going to achieve great things in the future.”

“These recipients are bright, hardworking, and deserving,” says Spelman President Beverly Tatum. “They only lack the financial resources necessary to continue their pursuit of a Spelman education.”

Support from donors has enabled these students to stay in school and pursue their dreams. One senior from Americus, Georgia, echoed the comments of many of the scholars. “Spelman has prepared me to change the world,” she says, “and I am eternally grateful.”
I am so proud to announce that Spelman alumnae supported our College in record numbers last year, with a dramatic increase in the number of us who engaged with our alma mater. In fact, 39 percent of us made a gift. How did we do it? We started on Founders Day, answering a challenge to support our Annual Fund. On the final day of that challenge last April, we received a generous number of 830 gifts—a record setter for the highest number of gifts in a single day in Spelman history.

Our efforts had tremendous benefit. For starters, in support of our mission, your gifts allowed current students to study abroad. Last spring, for example, Spelman students studied the African Diaspora and the World in London and Liverpool, learning about those cities’ historical roles in the transatlantic slave trade. They interacted with Europeans to understand current local culture and demographics, and they developed proposals for diaspora-related research projects. These students returned to campus with a heightened awareness of their place in the world and a greater sense of global citizenship.

A higher educational institution is only as good as its faculty, and here again our contributions had an impact by supporting faculty travel to present their findings and explore best practices at conferences around the world. One of those faculty members, Dr. Al-Yasha Williams, associate professor of philosophy and religious studies, attended the 60th Annual Political Studies Association of the UK Conference in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Every year, gifts to the Annual Fund through the Every Woman...Every Year! Campaign support Spelman in ways that these examples demonstrate, and more. They meet operating costs, pay faculty salaries, and provide financial aid for scholarships. But just as important, they demonstrate our confidence in Spelman’s performance. Alumnae gifts encourage others such as government agencies, charitable foundations, and corporations to match that support.

Our alumnae giving this past year has vaulted us into a select group of colleges and universities nationwide that can boast this level of support. We are among the top 10 women’s colleges as ranked by U.S. News & World Report, but many of those colleges boast higher alumnae participation. I challenge you to help us be competitive with the best of the best by increasing your support.

This letter gives me a chance once a year to publicly acknowledge how proud I am of my sister alumnae. And next year offers us all another opportunity to show how proud we are of Spelman. It is truly a place that is making an impact on the world, and I thank you for helping our College to continue to thrive.

Sincerely,

Yvonne R. Jackson, C’70
Chair, Board of Trustees
Spelman College
Spelman College embarked on the public phase of a historic undertaking this past year. The official launch of The Campaign for Spelman College began with an October 16 reception to launch the $150 million fundraising initiative—the largest in the institution’s history.

Building on $84 million that was collected during the nucleus phase, the whirlwind week of launch events celebrated the transformative Spelman experience and the opportunity to fulfill the campaign’s primary goals. Contributions now top $95 million, which puts the goals of the initiative well within reach.

Aligned with the institution’s 2015 strategic plan objectives, the goals are for each student to receive the financial support she needs to complete her education; more global engagement opportunities; enhanced research experiences and career-related internships; increased access to alumnae connections; individualized leadership development experiences; and expanded service learning and community engagement activities.

“Spelman was where I learned about pride, empowerment, competition, discipline and confidence,” said Jerri DeVard, C’79, a member of the Spelman Board of Trustees, at the launch reception with campaign cochairs, J. Veronica Biggins, C’68, and Frank Blake, chairman and CEO, The Home Depot. “It is therefore with enthusiasm and vigor that I approach this fundraising effort so that many more generations of talented, deserving women have access to this same transformational experience.”
The Campaign for Spelman College

All gifts and pledges made since July 1, 2004, are included in this $150 million comprehensive fundraising effort. Spelman College gratefully acknowledges the following contributors of $25,000 and above for The Campaign for Spelman College.

Ways to Give
Charitable gifts play a critical role in helping to sustain the excellence of the Spelman educational experience, allow the College’s strategic plan to flourish, and ensure that the institution attracts and educates leaders who will change the world.

Ways of giving
- Outright gifts yield immediate tax benefits to you and have an immediate impact on Spelman.
- Various annuities pay you income now and preserve the principal for Spelman’s use later.
- Bequest intentions provide a living testament to your desire to invest in generations of women who sustain our tradition of achievement. Donors of a certain age who document their commitment may be recognized as contributors to the current comprehensive campaign.

Cash gifts and pledges
The easiest and most popular form of giving, these contributions can be made online or by electronic funds transfer (EFT), recurring credit card deductions (RCC), phone, or mail. For as little as $10 a month, the RCC option allows you to set up regular, automatic payments charged to the card you select, and your EFT gifts to Spelman will be automatically deducted from your checking or savings account.

Gifts of appreciated securities
Sometimes more valuable than outright cash gifts, these contributions give you an immediate tax deduction and do not incur capital gains. The sale of these transferred securities enables Spelman to support needed initiatives.

Matching gifts
Matching gifts can be used to double your gift to Spelman College. If you are employed with a matching gift company, please contact your company’s human resources department for instructions.

To learn more about gift opportunities, please contact the Office of Development at (866) 512-1690 or visit www.spelman.edu.

Creative Ways to Give
Donor: George Wein
Gift: Drawing by Charles White
When artist Andrea Barnwell was researching the artist Charles White, she discovered White’s craggly portrait of John Brown, who was hanging a sign in protest. The 1938 graphite drawing, owned by New York collector George Wein, was so powerful that Barnwell decided to include it in her monograph of White, published by Pomegranate Press. Today that drawing has made its way into the collection of the Spelman Museum of Art, where Barnwell is the director. Wein was so delighted that a piece in his collection had made its way into the monograph that he decided to give the paper drawing to Spelman for all museum visitors to enjoy.

This past year, Dr. Robinson supported education in yet another way—by making Spelman the beneficiary of an insurance policy worth $10,000. She wanted the policy, which she received from the beneficiary of an insurance policy worth $10,000.

Creative Ways to Give

Donor: Nicole Jenkins
Gift: Electronic Funds Transfers (ETFs)

The class of 1999 brought a competitive spirit to the planning for their 10-year reunion. They wanted to increase not only the amount of their class gift but also the number of donors. “We wanted to encourage our classmates to become voluntary, intentional, and consistent givers,” said Nicole Jenkins, a clerk for a federal district court judge in Atlanta. Another classmate, Dionne Cowan, a math analytics teacher, had an idea of how to do that—through regular electronic funds transfers (ETFs). Jenkins believes the new program “will allow us to shift our focus from just giving during reunion year to consistently giving over time.”

Anuently, the alumnae section highlights donors who have contributed to the school's activities and programs. The list includes names of alumnae and their contributions. This information is presented in a tabular format, with each row representing a different alumna and her contribution or donation. The contributions range from monetary donations to gifts of time and expertise. The alumnae are listed alphabetically by their last name, with the amount donated and other details provided.
