How can one woman have sustainable impact on the world?
There is a proverb that someone paraphrased and illustrated for me that hangs in my home office in Reynolds Cottage. It says, “Wisdom has built herself a house and set herself a table.” And I think of it when I think of Spelman. Beginning with the College’s founders, Sophia Packard and Harriet Giles, and the indispensable Father Frank Quarles, who lent the first class of women the basement of Friendship Baptist Church in 1881, there have been generations of wise women and men that have devoted their time and energy here to build this house of learning, and set a table of academic opportunity for generations of students.
Today, with the Spelman College Plan for 2015, a true world-class learning opportunity is being created here at Spelman—a veritable academic feast is being set on the table. All of our current students will benefit from the efforts we are making each day. But it is the Class of 2015 that will be the first class to have the opportunity to sit at the Spelman table and enjoy the fruits of the new strategic plan in all of its dimensions.

To get us there, we embarked on the $150 million Campaign for Spelman College. I am happy to tell you that we have passed the $100 million milestone, completing two-thirds of our journey. The generosity of alumnae, corporations, faculty, friends, foundations, parents, staff, and our current students have secured more than $107 million of much-needed funds for scholarships, renovations that will “green” one of our most historic buildings on campus, faculty and student research, and support of Spelman’s Annual Fund. This year, 41 percent of our alumnae made thoughtful gifts to the College and put Spelman in the top 10 for alumnae participation at women’s liberal arts colleges in the United States. Additionally, 63 percent of the Class of 2011 graduates raised nearly $5,000 for their Senior Legacy Gift to support the President’s Safety Net Fund.

I look forward to seeing all that we will accomplish as we secure the remaining $43 million of the campaign. Together, we have begun this work with pride, passion, and an unfailing belief in both upholding Spelman’s legacy and ensuring our bold new tomorrow.

With sincere thanks,

Beverly Daniel Tatum, Ph.D.
President, Spelman College

In April 2011, Deirdre Robinson, director of Organizational Development at Dignity Health (formerly known as Catholic Healthcare West), arrived on Spelman’s campus to attend Research Day. She was greeted by the 11 inaugural Dignity Health Scholars for Healthcare and was reassured that the talent of Spelman students and their commitment to healthcare has already made an impact on the world. Robinson recognized that these young women are the future of fighting the leading causes of death for the African-American community, including heart disease, cancer, stroke, and diabetes.

A Healthy Legacy

Last year, Spelman and the San Francisco-based Dignity Health joined together to fight against the growing health disparities between African-Americans and other racial groups due to discrimination, cultural barriers, and lack of access to healthcare.

Dignity Health took the lead by making a $1 million gift to the College to help prepare Spelman students for careers in health, allied health, and healthcare administration, with the aim of providing much-needed professionals of color in those communities with the greatest need. The gift supports scholarships, internships, international service trips, and research and conference opportunities. Providing this type of support aligns with the Spelman GOALS (Global experiences for all students; Opportunities for career-related internships and undergraduate research experience; Alumnae engagement and mentoring; Leadership development; and Service learning through community involvement).

“We at Dignity Health believe in the excellence and importance of Spelman College and its mission of providing a high-quality education for women of color,” said Lloyd Dean, president and CEO of the company, which focuses on delivering high-quality, affordable healthcare services, and serving and advocating for the poor and disenfranchised. Spelman women have proven to be a good investment. The first 11 selected to serve as Dignity Health Scholars plan careers in surgical pathology, pediatric oncology, child psychology, prosthetics, and physical therapy.

“The contribution, particularly the scholarship component, helped many deserving students continue their educational pursuits at Spelman College,” said Dr. Barbara Bell, director of the Health Careers Program, which is celebrating 40 years of supporting women of African descent pursuing careers in the health and allied health fields. “All scholars had summer experiences ranging from research to volunteer experiences—all with a biomedical/healthcare association.”

Two scholars were selected as summer interns at Chandler Regional Hospital in Chandler, Ariz. At the end of the summer, they traveled to Pasadena, Calif., to make a presentation to Dignity Health about their experiences. “Overall, I believe that my experience at Dignity Health made me a better person,” said Jessica Fitzgerald, C’2013. “I was able to further develop my leadership skills and also further my passion for healthcare.”

Witnessing firsthand the lack of quality healthcare and specialists in her rural Mississippi community, the biology major’s passion for healthcare grew.

President Dr. Beverly Daniel Tatum is delighted about the partnership with Dignity Health. “This important work will help women of African descent give back to their communities both in the services they will be able to provide and as role models for other men and women of color who want to change the world through healthcare,” she said.

Social advocacy is a passion for Thekia Cheeseborough, C‘2013. The psychology major has been involved in numerous service initiatives during her tenure at Spelman College, including advocating for youth through a national teaching internship and as a volunteer at a community development organization that empowers families to be self-sufficient.
Cheeseborough is also a participant in the recently launched Social Justice Fellows Program, funded for two academic years by a $500,000 grant from The Atlantic Philanthropies. This latest example of the College’s rich tradition of preparing young women to become change agents around the world provides students like Cheeseborough with a valuable foundation in advocacy.

“Spelman women should be represented in all arenas as leaders. We want to produce women who are equipped with the intellectual engagement and personal experiences required of 21st-century change agents,” said Dr. Cynthia Neal Spence, C’78, an associate professor of sociology who is leading the effort. “These women will hold positions where they are able to make structural changes in the ways we address the needs of persons in society who are voiceless.”

The College is structuring programmatic initiatives and experiences that will help prepare the next generation of social justice advocates to become thought leaders and scholar activists. The nonprofit sector leadership development program in social policy advocacy is designed to create opportunities for 10 rising juniors to explore how social policy responds to the critical needs—education, economic and personal security, and health and wellness of the aged and youth.

A modern interpretation of Spelman’s founding mission, the program is critical to achieving the goals of the College’s strategic plan. The investment from The Atlantic Philanthropies is being used to execute student fellowships, international advocacy opportunities, paid summer internships, and social justice curriculum development.

The participants are guided by faculty and alumna mentors. Their internships foster stronger relationships between Spelman and social policy advocacy agencies to increase opportunities for them to obtain positions in the social justice arena. Participants are also encouraged to consider post-graduate opportunities to continue their leadership development as social justice policy advocates.

After obtaining a master’s degree in clinical psychology, Cheeseborough plans a career assisting students at risk for educational challenges due to psychological, emotional, or physical harm. “Before being granted the opportunity to be a Social Justice Fellow, I focused much of my efforts on direct service,” she said. “Although I am still dedicated to engaging in hands-on service, I now know that I can also benefit underserved communities by working to change and implement policies.”

The criteria for the Social Justice Fellows Program allows for a diversity of participants. “We’re targeting those students who have high academic achievement, high financial need, and a proven commitment to service,” explained Dr. Spence, who is a member of the Spelman College board of trustees. “The formalized structure of this program supports the social justice work that Spelman students are already involved in.”

Orrianne Morrison, C’2013, has had to report senior abuse and neglect as a care manager, and is committed to a life of advocacy. “This program is an amazing opportunity to find my place in the realm of social justice and identify the issues about which I am most passionate,” said the biology major, who plans to establish a clinic that provides preventative healthcare to underserved populations. “Interning at a social justice advocacy organization gives me the opportunity to understand the real-life work that leads to the changes that make significant differences in the lives of others.”

Ashley Grisham, C’2012, spent the fall semester of her junior year in Shanghai as the first Spelman student to gain acceptance into the advanced Asian studies program of East China Normal University. The International Studies major also performed in the university’s glee club, and won second place—over hundreds of participants—singing in Chinese in Shanghai’s international singing competition.

“My world perspective has evolved. I can now appreciate the cultural differentiation between the cities to which I’ve traveled and the U.S.,” said Grisham, who interned at the Shanghai office of the American law firm Paul Hastings, and plans a career as an international corporate litigator. “As a Spelman student, I know there is a place abroad for African-American women, not only in the corporate sector, but at the table of global innovation.”

The significant impact of this type of global opportunity is driving alumnae who’ve benefitted from studying abroad to contribute to an enhanced program that will internationalize their sisters’ Spelman experiences for years to come.

“Studying abroad became a differentiator for me as a candidate for jobs,” said Colleen Taylor, C’90, who spent a semester during her sophomore year studying economics in Cambridge, England. “It lets people know that you’re a broad-based thinker. When I was interviewing for international positions, I could say I lived abroad, and it made a difference.”

Such benefits fulfill the purpose of the College’s increased focus on the global experience, a priority of the Spelman College Strategic Plan for 2015: Strengthening the Core. Spelman recently named Dimeji Togunde, Ph.D., dean of the Gordon-Zeto Center for Global Education, launched under the auspices of the Gordon-Zeto Endowed Fund for International Initiatives, which is supported by a $17 million anonymous commitment received in 2008. The center will serve as the hub for Spelman’s international programs aligned with curriculum development, international student recruitment, and study abroad.

For half a century, Spelman has been sending students overseas to enhance their academic growth and increase their international exposure. But it’s the past two decades that have seen the strongest growth in a more formalized Study Abroad and International Exchange Program under the guidance of Margery A. Ganz, Ph.D., history professor and director of Study Abroad. Such growth supports the College’s strategic goal for every Spelman student to have an international experience by 2015.

Like many of the College’s students who study abroad, Toure Scott, C’2012, would have been unable to have her international experiences had she not been the recipient of numerous scholarships that support global learning.

The International Studies major spent her 2011 spring semester in Rabat, Morocco, in daily four-hour seminars learning about Moroccan families, youth participants in revolutions, and the country’s human rights violations. “We were there during the Arab revolution and had to take the back streets a lot to get to classes, which were held in a refurbished house,” remembered Scott, who lived with host families and learned Arabic at the School for International Training.

“My home stay was in a rural village for a week. It was intense. I learned how to rise with the sun and go to sleep when it went down. I lived with a family in a compound made of white-washed concrete and mud. We spent the days working on a school and talking with village elders. I’m more aware now that the world is far bigger than the U.S., and what you see on TV about people in other countries is not necessarily how they live.”

Anna Ponder, C’86, knows how important international travel at the undergraduate level is to developing a global perspective. She spent her junior year at Syracuse University in Strasbourg, France.

“I had fun, and learned an awful lot—and not all in the classroom,” admitted Ponder, who traveled to Morocco with her Spelman roommate. “We rode the unreserved train all the way through France and down through Spain and then took a boat across to Morocco. We randomly met very interesting people, including other Spelmanites.”

“I gained a certain amount of maturity and a comfort level from learning to live on my own and traveling to places where I didn’t speak the language. I wouldn’t trade that experience,” added Ponder, a partner and director of Investor Relations at V3 Capital Management.

During her Cambridge study abroad, Colleen Taylor took advantage of London theater, history, and architecture on the weekends and traveled around Europe with friends on a student pass for four weeks, “taking the Eurail with backpacks and eating baguettes and yogurt.” Ponder and Taylor’s experiences led them to support financially the endowing of the Margery Ganz Study Abroad Scholarship.

“I am confident that my career success can be directly tied back to my study abroad experience,” said Taylor, who has visited more than 60 countries and is now an executive vice president at Capital One Bank. “Study abroad allowed me to get the best job out of Spelman, to be competitive with some of the best candidates in the nation. I know that when I give, those dollars are going to benefit young Spelman women in the same way.”

“‘I’m more aware now that the world is far bigger than the U.S., and what you see on TV about people in other countries is not necessarily how they live.”

Spelman women who have graduated within the last 10 years are known at the College as both young alumnae and the future of philanthropy. Beginning with the Class of 2001 through 2010, this year’s young alumnae have continued this tradition in grand style.

Nearly 45 percent of these young professionals and graduate students made a contribution to Spelman in fiscal year 2011, up from last year’s 44 percent. Their contributions have also made a significant impact on this year’s overall alumnae giving rate of 41 percent—that’s 10 percent higher than just two years ago.

According to Kenique Penn Freeman, C’2000, a former annual giving officer working with Spelman’s young alumnae and current students, part of the success of this impressive trend stems from the Every Woman...Every Year! efforts. “Every Woman...Every Year! gave them a platform to give,” she said. “It was a move to action that showed them that philanthropy is accessible for everyone.”

She persuaded her senior class sisters to each contribute $20.10, an amount to honor their graduation year, to a scholarship that would eventually be given to the President’s Safety Net Fund to help those Spelman women behind them whose prospects for graduating were in jeopardy due to financial strain. The Class of 2011 continued this work, with more than 63 percent of the graduating seniors participating in the effort. This year, 48 percent of the Class of 2010 contributed $7,434 and the 63 percent of the graduating Class of 2011 gave $4,879.

These young alumnae and current Spelman students mobilize quickly by using social media as a mechanism for success. They use Facebook and Twitter to encourage their sisters to give, to remind their friends to tell other friends to make a gift, or even to track the success of an effort such as the Founders Day Challenge. Young Spelman women want to give back. They want to ensure that their sisters have the important experiences that will shape their Spelman experience and inspire them to be future agents of change.

AVERAGE OF 2009 AND 2010 ALUMNAE PARTICIPATION, U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT (most recent available)
In 2011, the Spelman sisterhood broke fundraising records as the College celebrated 130 years of Spelman’s legacy.

Their impressive commitment to the College began with events to commemorate Founders Day, which included joining Spelman students for Convocation in Sisters Chapel to hear an awe-inspiring rendition of “A Choice to Change the World” sung by Broadway legend Jennifer Holliday.

On the College’s actual birthday, Monday, April 11, alumnae ramped up their financial support. The institution brought in 1,306 alumnae gifts, the largest number of online contributions made in a single day. Also, the $111,685 total was the most funds raised in a single day. Our 2011 Founders Day Challenge was successfully completed as more than 6,000 alumnae made thoughtful contributions that secured an anonymous $250,000 gift.

In May, Spelman women rallied yet again during their 2011 reunion. Recognition of their love for their alma mater was celebrated at this year’s Philanthropy Awards, presented at the Blue Note Theatre:

Outstanding Class Participation: Classes of 1956, 1976, and 1951. This award is given to the classes with the highest percentage of alumnae who make outright gifts to Spelman College. Top three winners: 1956 (88 percent), 1976 (79 percent), and 1951 (65 percent).

Outstanding Cumulative Class Gift: The Olympic Class of 1996. This award is given to the class with the highest total contributions to the College since their last reunion year. The Class of 1996 has given the most, $153,502. They took the lead in fund-raising for the Women’s Research and Resource Center for the $1 million Ford Foundation Challenge.

Most Significant Class Pledge: The Centennial Class of 1981. This award is given to the class that raises the most documented pledged gifts. The Class of 1981 committed to provide $371,655 in gifts.

Most Significant Class Gift: The Centennial Class of 1981. This award is given to the class that raises the most gifts during Reunion weekend. The Class of 1981 gave $131,820.
In April 1973, Alberta Williams King, H.S.’22, sent a letter to friends of Spelman College with the hope that the spirit of generosity would move them to provide scholarship support for Spelman students. King, most remembered as the wife of Rev. Martin Luther King and mother of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., wrote:

“My concern is for all young people, but especially the bright, young Black women who at this time in our history have such crucial roles to play. There are tensions in our urban ghettos; health care for the poor is critically lacking; schools for low-income neighborhoods must be improved; battles for equal employment opportunities must still be fought in the courts. These problems demand talented and educated Black women with commitment and qualities of leadership.”

With 78 percent of Spelman students receiving some form of financial aid (52 percent being Pell Grant eligible), scholarships are still the most important way to ensure that they will graduate and go on to change the world. One such example is Brittney Boykin, C’2011, a recipient of the Alberta Williams King Memorial Endowed Scholarship for Music & Non-Violence Studies.

“I am honored to have had a scholarship named for a Spelman woman and my Spelman sister," said Boykin, now a graduate student studying sacred music with an emphasis on conducting. “There are not many scholarships for music majors or for Black women pursuing a music degree. It inspires me to want to set up a scholarship someday to encourage other Black women who want to study music.”
More than 41% of the alumnae of Spelman College made gifts last year, resulting in a record-breaking $1.8M.

Last year, more than 7,900 alumnae, friends, parents, faculty, staff, and students contributed $14.9M in support of Spelman’s mission. This is simply outstanding!

At this institution, our trustees, our president, alumnae, parents, friends, and all who are a part of the Spelman family work together to ensure that the College is healthy and remains strong. Financially supporting Spelman undergirds our traditions of educational excellence, leadership development, and community involvement, which continue to attract the best and the brightest.

Financially supporting Spelman undergirds our traditions of educational excellence, leadership development, and community involvement, which continue to attract the best and the brightest.

Alumnae commitment to our beloved institution was at an all-time high this year. More than 41% of Spelman alumnae, or 6,529 women, made gifts in FY11. Alumnae support also reached an all-time high, with more than $1.8M received from individual alumnae.

This level of support is vital and appreciated by exceptional young women who are receiving an exemplary college experience because of you. Spelman is now educating more Pell-grant eligible students than any other selective liberal arts college in the nation, and continues to do the important work of providing social mobility to top-tier students despite financial circumstances. At nearly 80 percent, our graduation rate is one of the highest in the nation, especially among institutions educating significant numbers of low-income students.

And there is so much more to accomplish on behalf of our talented and deserving students. In my new role as chair of the board, my vision for the future is multi-layered, and my focus will always be about our 21st-century students. Your previous and future gifts support important priorities, like the need for every student to leave Spelman with global competencies as well as benefit from an improved physical infrastructure while they are matriculating inside the gates. Your investment in Spelman is equally critical to our efforts to attract first-class students and support the outstanding faculty who educate, mentor, and advise these young women of purpose.

The opportunities in this global environment are endless for our well-prepared students. Thank you for helping to provide them with the sound foundation they need to succeed.

Sincerely,

Rosalind J. Brewer, C’84
Chair, Board of Trustees
Spelman College
Spelman College has had a remarkable year thanks to the commitment of our donors. Their generosity has pushed The Campaign for Spelman College past the $100 million mark and energized the momentum to secure the remaining $50 million in this historic fundraising initiative.

Campagne Donors

Spelman College gratefully acknowledges the following contributors for providing a solid foundation of support for The Campaign for Spelman College. Recognition period, July 1, 2004 through June 30, 2011.

Faculty and staff celebrate how the generous commitment of Spelman donors impacts student success.
The vision for the campaign is to enhance the educational opportunity for every Spelman student scholar, according to Kassandra Jolley, vice president, Institutional Advancement, who is proud of the significant progress made toward the goal of raising $150 million. "To produce forward-thinking, socially conscious change agents, we need continued support of our fundraising efforts," she said.

Since the campaign was launched in 2004, the College has raised $37.9 million for scholarships, $36 million for faculty and academic programs, $20 million for the annual fund / in-kind support, $9.5 million for the campus environment.

These gifts have allowed Spelman to uphold its reputation as a leading national liberal arts college for women. The College has awarded more scholarships; more students have been able to travel abroad; faculty and students have had more research opportunities; and important campus initiatives have flourished.

These achievements are even more significant because they were attained in great part through the increase in alumnae participation, which has nearly doubled from 21 percent to 41 percent since the 2004 campaign launch. This participation supports the campaign goals, which are aligned with Spelman’s 2015 strategic plan.

Thoughtful contributors are vital to the College’s ability to educate millennial students. "The willingness of donors to share their time, treasure, and talent will ensure that future Spelman women have life-changing experiences that will enable them to change the world," said President Beverly Daniel Tatum.

The 1881 Society

The Spelman College 1881 Society recognizes alumnae and other individuals who contribute $100 or more to the College. It is composed of three categories: Lifetime Societies, Annual Societies, and the Guardian Society.

Lifetime Societies recognize cumulative giving in the amount of $100,000 or more.

Annual Societies recognize donors who have included Spelman College in their wills and made provisions for other planned gifts.

The Guardian Society recognizes donors who have included Spelman College in their wills and made provisions for other planned gifts.

I know why I give to Spelman College every time I visit and see the newest classes of confident young women, or when I read the latest newsletter filled with information about the wonderful opportunities and experiences available to them.

When I remember that a member of my family has attended Spelman almost continuously since my aunt graduated in 1929, I know why I give to Spelman. And just this year, my granddaughter became the fourth generation in my own family group. I am so pleased to give back to my alma mater whenever I can on an annual basis and in a planned gift no matter how small the amounts.

I have been a supporter of Spelman College since 1973.

Philanthropy Report | 25
The Blue Gala Raises $2 Million

The event saluted extraordinary individuals who positively influence the next generation of dynamic women leaders. Honorees were Grammy Award-winner Mary J. Blige (recipient of the Marian Wright Edelman Service Award); Walmart executive and new chair of Spelman’s board of trustees, Rosalind J. Brewer, C’84; attorney Kathryn C. Chenzia; and educator Marian Wright Edelman, C’60, founder of the Children’s Defense Fund.

“We recognize the 2010 awardees for their tremendous contributions toward bettering our communities,” said LaTanya Richardson Jackson, C’71, co-founder of the Blue Gala. “Their achievements motivate us to pave the way for the next generation to achieve goals that will change the world.”

Jerri DeVaard, C’79, agreed. “The Blue honorees represent the epitome of what Spelman College stands for: excellence, leadership, service, and a commitment to positive social change,” said DeVaard, co-founder of the Blue Gala and a member of Spelman’s board of trustees.

United to support expanding opportunities for young Spelman women to pursue and complete their higher education, the Blue Champions included Marilyn Booker, C’82, Judith I. Byrd, Chenault, Sharon Collier, Malaak Compton-Rock, Kimberly B. Davis, C’81, Dawn Hudson, Melanie Kuin, Gwen Adams Norton, Marva Smalls, Sharon Taylor, Paulette Washington, and Janice Savin Williams.
I cherish my most memorable Spelman experience—meeting my Spelman sisters and closest friends. The Spelman community was created for spiritual, physical, and mental growth. The reason I give to Spelman is that I believe with every fiber of my being that giving back is crucial to helping make sure women for generations after me are able to get what I did from the experience. Spelman was a blessing to me financially and it is only fair that I give back to her.

A Spelman woman appreciates responsibility.

Dr. Ruth Baines, C’57

I give because Spelman made a difference in my life. Giving is an obligation that I, and my Spelman sisters, must fulfill.

In this life, we pay for a lot of things that we don’t get or that are not what we expected. But Spelman... it’s about what Spelman does for us that demands that we provide our support. This place is one of the few institutions in the country that supports and nurtures us. I was not always able to give, but I can now. So I give because Spelman made a difference in my life.

Whether you choose to give to the Annual Fund, make a leadership gift of $25,000 or more, provide a gift or grant through your business or foundation, or plan to make a future gift, Spelman College appreciates your commitment to the education of our extraordinary students.

You can make your gifts through the following vehicles:

Ways of Giving:

- Outright gifts yield immediate tax benefits and have an immediate impact on Spelman.
- Various annuities pay you income now and preserve the principal for later use for Spelman.
- Bequest provisions ensure a testamentary gift to your desire to invest in generations of young women who sustain our tradition of achievement. Donors of a certain age who document their commitment by naming Spelman as beneficiary in their estate plans will receive recognition in the Campaign for Spelman.

Cash gifts and pledges:

The easiest and most popular form of giving, these contributions can be made online; by electronic funds transfer (EFT); recurring credit card deductions (RCC); phone; or mail. For as little as $10 a month, the RCC option allows you to set up regular, automatic payments charged to the card that you select, and your EFT gifts to Spelman will be automatically deducted from your checking or savings account.

Gifts of appreciated securities:

When you deed your home/vacation home, undeveloped property, or commercial building to Spelman, these gifts also give you an immediate tax deduction and do not incur capital gains. Spelman may either use your property for the College or sell it and apply the proceeds to achieve its strategic goals.

Gifts of real property:

When you deed your home/vacation home, undeveloped property, or commercial building to Spelman, these gifts also give you an immediate tax deduction and do not incur capital gains. Spelman may either use your property for the College or sell it and apply the proceeds to achieve its strategic goals.

Matching gifts:

Matching gifts can be used to double your gift to Spelman College. If you are employed with a matching gift company, please contact your company’s human resources department for instructions.

To learn more about gift opportunities, please contact the Office of Development at (866) 512-1690 or visit www.spelman.edu.
President Audrey Manley told our graduating class that she gave $55 every month upon graduation until she could give more. That stuck with me.

I have given to Spelman since graduating and now I give monthly. I want other women to have the choice she could give more. That stuck with me.

For me, it is important to support women who are making a difference and Spelman College has a long history of producing leaders who are changing the world.

We spend a lot of money on things that we forget about or lose. The Spelman experience is one that will never leave your memory. I feel so good knowing that every month I contribute to enriching some young woman’s life.
With a Spelman education, you all have everything you need, right here and right now, to be everything you’ve ever wanted to be.”

Spelman art students are benefitting from the art of Johnnie Lumpkin Davis, whose work was influenced by the education she says she received from "brilliant artists," who were her professors.

Having established the art department of St. Augustine College in Raleigh, N.C., during her career, Davis, at 82, continues to paint. The vibrancy of color and Spelman endowment is reflected in all the works of the former art major. Proceeds from her art, which range in price from $150 to $5,000, benefit the Johnnie Lumpkin Davis Scholarship Fund for Spelman students who major in art and demonstrate a financial need.
Calm, confident, courageous, and caring are just a few of the words Spelman College board of trustees members and representatives of the College used repeatedly to describe outgoing trustee chair Yvonne R. Jackson, ’70, at her surprise retirement celebration on April 15, 2011.

“She’s always poised, always cool and calm,” said trustee Rose Harris Johnson, ’57, during a video tribute to Jackson. “I am so very positively impressed with her ability to address tough problems and situations with such grace and dignity. She is a true Spelman woman. Yvonne’s deep love for Spelman always shines through.” Yvonne Jackson is True Blue. Giving generously of her time, treasure, and talent, she has set the example for her Spelman sisters to follow.

In 1977, I became a Spelmanite at the age of 11. My Aunt Darlene enrolled at Spelman and when I started hearing about the history and traditions, I knew that Spelman College was the place where I wanted to go.

I give because Spelman is where I received my foundation and the College helped me find my place and my purpose in life. Attending Spelman taught me about the importance of social consciousness and of uplifting a community. Others should experience this, and so I remind my Spelman sisters, "that to whom much is given, much is expected."
