Active Goals. Make Impact.

THE REPORT ON PHILANTHROPY 2012–2013
Greetings,

Spelman is a community filled with rituals of celebration. One of my favorites is the opening convocation each year where I often join with students, faculty and staff in listening to the Glee Club sing:

*It’s my choice
And I choose to change the world
It’s my voice
And I’ll speak with pride and courage*

Composed by Sarah Stephens, C’2007, and Glee Club Director Dr. Kevin Johnson, “A Choice to Change the World” speaks to the important values that connect all Spelman sisters: academic excellence, leadership, and a devotion to making an impact in the world.

A college education is a privilege. Through your contributions and commitment to Spelman, you provide the opportunities that shape the Spelman experience and help to prepare the next generation of women who will change the world.

In the College’s Strategic Plan, we created attainable goals, and each year Spelman women exceed what we envisioned. Every student will have a global experience, whether it’s those who participate in study abroad or the scholars from Zimbabwe who have the opportunity to enhance cross-cultural learning.

The benefits of providing more opportunities for undergraduate research and career-related internships for students reach far beyond the Spelman gates. This year a faculty member and student were able to spend the summer conducting cancer research.

Alumnae and students are reaping the rewards of connecting regularly through mentoring and engagement. Because of an initiative developed by a former faculty member, hundreds of nontraditional students have had the opportunity to obtain a Spelman degree.

A well-rounded education would not be complete without leadership development. Focus on this component can be seen in students who advocate to end health disparities in underserved communities.

That work is not surprising as Spelman has always prioritized service learning, linking community involvement to the classroom experience.

You provide the opportunities that help to prepare the next generation of women who will change the world.

Centering the Spelman experience on these goals is intentional. We live in challenging times when educated women are needed more than ever. The generosity of alumnae, corporations, faculty, friends, foundations, parents, staff, and our current students has secured vital financial support to develop these change agents. We appreciate your contributions to scholarships, facility renovations, innovative initiatives such as the Wellness Revolution, faculty and student research, and support of Spelman’s Annual Fund—all of which are critical for Spelman women to succeed.

With sincere thanks,

Beverly Daniel Tatum, Ph.D.
President

Spelman College’s Strategic Plan is our belief in the power of a Spelman education and commitment as a community to uphold it. This community encompasses Spelman students, faculty, staff, administrators, alumnae, trustees and community partners—people united by their passion and purpose. Our agenda is to continue strengthening the academic core of the institution. Each constituency is participating by taking specific actions that support our GOALS, which build on our accomplishments as the premier historically Black college for women and one of the finest institutions for undergraduate education nationwide.

Global engagement, including international experiences and internationalizing curriculum

Opportunities for undergraduate research and career-related internships

Alumnae connections to strengthen our sisterly bonds

Leadership development focused on individual potential and best practices

Service learning and community engagement
Spelman College takes pride in a 78 percent graduation rate, nearly a third higher than the national average. Most of those graduates are the beneficiaries of financial support.
In the spring of 2013 in Zimbabwean towns 8,000 miles away from Spelman, nine young women received almost unbelievable news: they’d been chosen as the first class of Andrew Young International Scholars at the College. Nine first-year students and one sophomore will benefit from the scholarship, which provides full tuition, room, board, and fees for four full years, as well as financial assistance for travel between Atlanta and Zimbabwe.

Zimbabwean businessman and philanthropist Strive Masiyiwa and his wife Tsitsi started the Andrew Young International Scholars program at Spelman and Morehouse College to honor former ambassador and Atlanta civil rights leader Andrew Young. The couple’s mission for the program is to provide more educational opportunities to African students who show strong leadership potential. In 2012, 10 African men began their studies at Morehouse through the program. The two schools will alternate enrollment through the program for the next two years.

For scholarship recipient Tarisai Tambo, C’2017, the news she’d be traveling to the United States and attending Spelman on a scholarship came as a shock. She is the first in her family to attend college. “I kept pinching myself just to make sure it wasn’t a dream,” she remembers. “The only way I could express how happy I felt was through tears.” Tambo is using her Spelman education to prepare for her future back in Zimbabwe, where she hopes to work for the rights of women and children, and to someday serve as an ambassador. “In Africa the issue of discrimination against women is very active,” she says. “The vast population of Africa has adopted a stereotypical perception on the roles of women in the society. I discovered that some governments of the world are suppressing women and children’s rights, hence it became an area of interest to me.”

As the Andrew Young Scholars become acclimated to U.S. culture and their classwork, being so far from the familiar—their family, friends and homes—may be a bit challenging. But for these talented young women, the sacrifices are already well worth the rewards. Daphney Sihwa, C’2017, is an aspiring public health nutritionist. “It is my hope that I make the best out of everything I do. My first intention is to educate the people from my country about diets they are supposed to engage in with the intention of creating a healthy Zimbabwe.”

The Andrew Young International Scholarship, along with other resources for global recruitment, made it possible for Spelman to enroll a record number of international students in 2013. By sharing their unique perspectives and experiences, these students help Spelman with its goal of global engagement for all students. Spelman’s strategic plan also calls for internationalizing curriculums and programming, as well as encouraging meaningful international experiences for all students.

The College is also committed to providing support services to international students through its Gordon-Zeto Center for Global Education. Its director, Dr. Dimeji Togunde, says Spelman’s growing international student population creates both an opportunity and responsibility for the College. “We need to be very strategic and deliberate in programs and initiatives that aid in their integration and academic success at Spelman,” says Dr. Togunde, who spearheaded the launch of a one-to-one mentoring program where faculty members volunteer to provide guidance to international students. “This requires a concerted effort that is grounded in collaborative relationships among various [campus] offices.”

As the Andrew Young Scholars become acclimated to U.S. culture and their classwork, being so far from the familiar—their family, friends and homes—may be a bit challenging. But for these talented young women, the sacrifices are already well worth the rewards. Daphney Sihwa, C’2017, is an aspiring public health nutritionist. “It is my hope that I make the best out of everything I do,” says Sihwa. “My first intention is to educate the people from my country about diets they are supposed to engage in with the intention of creating a healthy Zimbabwe.”

As she well knows, educating others starts with educating herself.

Forty international students walked through the Spelman gates in the fall of 2013—the highest number of international students in the College’s history.
Danielle Gaitor, C’2015, made the first move. One day in the spring of 2013, she came to see Dr. Rosalind Gregory-Bass, C’92, to ask about her research on cancer biology.

Gaitor was interested in Spelman’s Howard Hughes Medical Institute research grants and thought her first-year biology professor would be a good mentor for summer research.

“When Danielle approached me and told me what her interests were, I thought it would be a good fit,” says Dr. Gregory-Bass, assistant professor in the department of biology. “I was very aware of her work ethic and her passion about science so I thought she would not only truly benefit from research but also have an appreciation of it.”

Dr. Gregory-Bass was right. Gaitor applied for and received a Howard Hughes Medical Institute grant to spend the summer in Dr. Gregory-Bass’ lab. The HHMI four-year, $1 million grant to Spelman provides biomedical research and career-related opportunities for faculty and students. So instead of spending the summer volunteering in a hospital in her hometown of Nassau, Bahamas, Gaitor spent full and enriching workdays contributing to her mentor’s research on why some cancers resist standard therapeutic treatments.

This wasn’t an opportunity for Gaitor only. “Having students in the lab has truly been rewarding for me,” says Dr. Gregory-Bass. “Oftentimes women and women of color have steered away from doing research. But it is great when I’m able to break it down for them step by step and watch them gain that same love for asking questions and coming up with answers. They motivate me to learn more.”

And Dr. Gregory-Bass made sure that Gaitor was learning by watching, doing and teaching. “Danielle would see us do a particular procedure, then she would have to do it the next time around, and then she’d teach our volunteer research assistant,” says Dr. Gregory-Bass.

By the end of the summer, Gaitor had implemented a cell biology study and come up with preliminary results. She’s now working to confirm her findings and will have the opportunity to present her work at an upcoming conference.

For Gaitor, the lessons of the lab were wide-ranging. “I learned how to read scientific literature,” she says. “I learned common laboratory techniques. I was able to use scientific equipment efficiently. I improved my oral and written communication.” She knows these skills will help her as she looks toward studying neurological sciences in the future.

Both women are thankful for the opportunity to spend the summer learning and working together through the HHMI grant. “Grants like this truly impact not just individual research projects but also the training of future scientists,” says Dr. Gregory-Bass. “We can send students out better prepared because they’ve had a hands-on experience at such an early stage in their academic career.”

Recognizing this level of career-related research is rare for young undergraduates at liberal arts colleges, Gaitor is even more appreciative of the opportunity. “It was truly a life-changing experience working under the mentorship of Dr. Gregory-Bass,” she says. “Her confidence in science and research encouraged me to be confident as well.”
G-STEM was established in 2010 with a five-year, $1.25 million National Science Foundation grant, giving Spelman the distinction of being the first historically Black college or university to receive such funding. More than 50 G-STEM scholars have traveled abroad to 12 different foreign countries. By 2015, a total of 106 STEM students will have gained international research experience abroad.
“Our main goal and emphasis was to have a way for adult women to return to college and get a degree. We were really harkening back to the origins of Spelman’s beginnings, because in that first Spelman class, there were really 10 women and one girl.”

The Spelman education of Pauline Drake, C’54, started early—age 2, to be exact. It was 1939 and few nursery schools were open to African-American children in Atlanta. The nursery at Spelman was one of the rare exceptions. By then, Drake’s family was already sold on Spelman, since both of her grandmothers had attended the College a half-century earlier.

But no one could have anticipated that 74 years later, Drake’s life would still be so interconnected with Spelman’s own growth. After all, there’s her standing as a revered alumna. There’s Drake’s 34 years of service as a faculty member and dean: directing first-year studies, teaching education classes and coordinating faculty development. And there’s her greatest pride: the way her work in continuing education cleared the way for nontraditional students, mature learners, to begin or complete their college studies and obtain a degree from Spelman.

Drake’s legacy lives on in the program that bears her name: the Pauline E. Drake Scholars Program for nontraditional students, which was started under her leadership in the early 1980s.

“Our main goal and emphasis was to have a way for adult women to return to college and get a degree,” says Drake. “We were really harkening back to the origins of Spelman’s beginnings, because in that first Spelman class, there were really 10 women and one girl. It wasn’t long since slavery was abolished and there were still so many in the community who could not read or write. Many of the women were mature women.”

As Drake began working with adult learners at Spelman who were also juggling families and jobs, she grew to deeply respect their determination. “The students really show so much persistence and have so much potential,” she says of the scholars in the program, which has received $250,000 in tuition support since 2009 from the Bernard Osher Foundation that has also endowed a scholarship with a $1 million gift. “It’s inspirational to be in their company and hear them describe the situations they saw as challenges but which they’ve been able to overcome.”

And while Drake is now retired, she still comes to campus to welcome new Pauline E. Drake Scholars, and then returns to celebrate their graduations. She also continues to provide financial gifts to the school. “When I started working at Spelman, of course, I knew more directly about the needs,” says Drake, who began her philanthropy to Spelman when she was the president of the Cleveland chapter of the College’s alumnae association in the 1960s. Now as a program’s namesake, she says, “It means I have a certain level of responsibility to support the program financially and help students with scholarships.” Her commitment to Spelman is a responsibility she’s glad to continue fulfilling.

Breanna Wilkerson, C’2015, takes little for granted: not her life, her family, her future, and certainly not her Spelman education.

In a life marked by upheaval, as a teen, Wilkerson began dreaming of something nobody in her family had achieved: a college education. After all, she already knew she wanted a career in public health researching the incidence and treatment of HIV/AIDS among women of color, after the premature death of her mother from the disease.

“I found Spelman through my own research,” says the San Antonio, Texas, native who lived with her grandmother to avoid foster care placement. “I didn’t know anybody that went to Spelman.” While balancing high school and, along with her brother, taking care of their disabled grandmother, Wilkerson learned of Spelman’s top ranking for African-American women going into healthcare professions. She applied, was accepted, and packed her bags for Atlanta.

“I was in a bad place,” she remembers. “I can’t get any private loans because I’m independent, and I don’t have a co-signer or any real credit…. The [Rosalind Gates] Brewer Scholarship saved my education.”

It’s been two years now since Wilkerson arrived on campus. These days, she continues to exemplify a purpose-filled life. The professors guiding her women’s studies major and public health minor recognize her hard work. What may not be as visible is her focus outside of the classroom in her work as a resident adviser, her service on her class council, her position as a social justice associate, and her commitment to Spelman’s Student Health Associates and Peer Educators organization also known as SHAPE.

Wilkerson has also found time and energy to start a Spelman chapter of GlobeMed, the first such chapter on the campus of a historically Black college or university. “It’s a grassroots organization with a mission to end healthcare disparities in underserved communities,” she explains. Through GlobeMed, Wilkerson will partner with a community in Kumasi, Ghana, on a public health intervention.

“These purposeful students are on a mission. But as first-generation students they face several challenges, including carrying a lot of responsibility,” says Spelman board chair Rosalind Gates Brewer, who established a scholarship to support students like Wilkerson. “When they think the odds are against them, I think they’re in their favor because they are fighters. Nine times out of ten these students are breaking the mold when they come to Spelman College.”

And while most students worry about grades, Wilkerson’s path has also involved finding solutions to very real concerns about money. In the middle of spring semester last year, she thought she wouldn’t be able to continue at Spelman because of financing. “I was in a bad place,” she remembers. “I can’t get any private loans because I’m independent, and I don’t have a co-signer or any real established credit.”

Wilkerson had begun packing her bags to leave when she learned she’d received a Rosalind Gates Brewer Scholarship, one of nine annual grants (eight at $10,000 and one at $20,000) established by the chair of Spelman’s board of trustees and renewable each year. “I was thankful and blessed,” she says of the scholarship, which is awarded to first-generation college students. “The Brewer Scholarship saved my education. I don’t know what I would have done or where I would have gone.” Instead of leaving Spelman, she was able to dive back into her coursework.

Grateful, Wilkerson sees scholarships not just as important in her life but as an important equalizer in the world of education: “They allow students who come from underserved communities to have the same chance as those around them, dispelling the assumption that you have to be rich to be smart.”

85% Last year, more than 85 percent of Spelman students received some form of financial assistance to support their enrollment and success.
For the 2012-2013 academic year, almost 1,000 Spelman students—nearly half of the student population—reported participating in 22,515 hours of community service through the Bonner Office of Community Service and Student Development. As one of the College’s priorities, service has been part of Spelman since its beginnings and is reflected in its mission to create lifelong servant leaders. From interning with the Shepherd Poverty Immersion Program to volunteering with HIV/AIDS organizations during alternative spring break trips and participating in Earth Week activities and the Girls Leadership Institute, students are engaged in service learning, which is integrated throughout their curriculum, enhancing their scholarship, civic engagement and leadership experiences.

If you want to know why I support Spelman, look no further than first-generation college student Breanna Wilkerson, C’2015. Last year, in between classes, she founded a chapter of the global health nonprofit GlobeMed at Spelman (the first at a historically Black college or university); worked as an adviser in her residence hall; and served on her class council. Read more about Breanna in our story on leadership on page 13.

I created the Brewer Scholarship for first-generation Spelman students like Breanna, whose journey reminds me of my own. That struggle is familiar to so many of my Spelman sisters, women who just needed a little help to move closer to their dreams.

I thank you for your gifts to Spelman because I know our contributions are often the deciding factor between a student dropping out or registering for the next semester’s classes. Because of your generous contributions to the Campaign for Spelman College, young women with extraordinary potential have benefitted from a transformative educational experience and are making an impact on the world.

Philanthropic support of our talented students makes all the difference. Of the $15,522,389 contributed by 7,135 donors in FY13, $1,891,897 in gifts were made by 5,728 alumnae, a participation rate of 34 percent.

The more we give, the more resources there are to enhance Spelman’s traditions of educational excellence, leadership development and community involvement. Purposeful students like Breanna appreciate the opportunities made possible by the $139,559,767 in total contributions you’ve invested in the Campaign as of June 30, 2013.

Every gift makes it possible for Breanna and her classmates to pursue their passions. Each gift from an alumna also brings us closer to our goal of 50 percent alumnae participation, a sisterly example of our commitment to educate the best and the brightest.

Thank you to the entire Spelman community—alumnae, friends, parents, faculty and staff—for making the impact that allows our students to do the same.

Sincerely,

Rosalind Gates Brewer, C’84
Chair, Board of Trustees
Spelman College
With The Campaign for Spelman College nearing completion, the magnitude of its impact throughout our entire community cannot be overstated. This groundbreaking Campaign has bolstered the areas of focus highlighted in the College’s strategic plan and funded critical initiatives that have shaped Spelman’s curriculum, landscape and a newly invigorated culture of philanthropy.

Since the Campaign’s launch, supporters have contributed $46,416,186 for scholarships, $40,963,990 for faculty and academic programs, $25,837,114 for the annual fund, inclusive of in-kind gifts, and $26,382,377 for campus environment.

The generosity of alumnae and friends has enhanced study abroad programs that will give students the required international perspective to succeed in the global marketplace, provided opportunities for research that will help fill the pipeline of African-American women in STEM careers, fostered connections that will benefit them throughout their lives, cultivated skills that will allow them to successfully navigate their professional endeavors, and helped them to be servant leaders in their communities.

One particular pride point for the College is that alumnae giving has grown from 21 percent at the Campaign’s inception to 34 percent today, peaking at 41 percent in 2011. “The final, and most meaningful, milestone would be for us to achieve 50 percent alumnae participation,” said Kassandra Jolley, vice president, Institutional Advancement. “The impact of that level of collective alumnae giving would place Spelman in rare air amongst our counterparts at other private, liberal arts women’s colleges and historically Black institutions.”

Such significant financial commitment to Spelman by its graduates—a noticeable endorsement to others—encourages giving from faculty, staff, friends, corporations and foundations.

Collectively your gifts allow the College to continue serving its mission of being a global leader in educating women of African descent through academic excellence and intellectual, creative, ethical and leadership development. Your support inspires Spelman women to commit to a life of positive social change. The work of their lives is your impact. Thank you.

Forward Thinker
Trojanell Bordenave-Wilson, C’74

Giving to Spelman means “paying it forward” through investing in the education of African-American women. The philanthropic endeavors of those that came before me are what allowed me to have the experience of attending Spelman. I want to do the same for our future generations. Spelman provided me with an exceptional education and fostered a sense of sisterhood that is still present in my life 40 years later.

Change Agent
Jasmine N. Edge, C’13

I give to Spelman because the College has given so much to me. Spelman has affirmed me, awakened my social consciousness, and equipped me to be an ethical leader driven to change the world. I commit to giving back to Spelman consistently so that women across the globe, including my students and future daughters, will be nurtured in ways that position them to become change agents in the world.

Paying It Forward
Dr. Evelyn Russell
I give because I was able to entrust Spelman with four formative years of my daughter’s life. With that, I have a responsibility to give back to afford other young ladies the opportunity to benefit from all that Spelman has to offer. While I do not give very large amounts, I feel small consistent gifts plus time can equal a lot. As an HBCU graduate, I feel a responsibility to support at whatever level that we can.

Whether you choose to give to the Annual Fund, make a leadership gift of $25,000 or more, provide a gift or grant through your business or foundation, or plan to make a future gift, Spelman College appreciates your commitment to the education of our extraordinary students.

OUTRIGHT GIFTS yield immediate tax benefits and have an instant impact on Spelman.

VARIOUS ANNUITIES provide you with income now and preserve the principal for later use for Spelman.

BEQUEST INTENTIONS are a living testament to your desire to invest in generations of young women who sustain our tradition of excellence. Donors of a certain age who document their commitment by naming Spelman as beneficiary in their estate plans will receive recognition in the Campaign for Spelman.

CASH GIFTS AND PLEDGES: The easiest and most popular form of giving, these contributions can be made online; by electronic funds transfer (EFT); recurring credit card deductions (RCC); phone; or mail. For as little as $10 a month, the RCC option allows you to set up regular, automatic payments charged to the card that you select, and your EFT gifts to Spelman will be automatically deducted from your checking or savings account.

GIFTS OF APPRECIATED SECURITIES: Sometimes more valuable than outright gifts, these contributions give you an immediate tax deduction and do not incur capital gains. The sale of these transferred securities enables Spelman to support critical initiatives.

GIFTS OF REAL PROPERTY: When you deed your home/vacation home, undeveloped property, or commercial building to Spelman, you receive an immediate tax deduction and do not incur capital gains. Spelman may either use your property for the College or sell it and apply the proceeds to achieve its strategic goals.

MATCHING GIFTS: Matching gifts can be used to double your gift to Spelman College. If you are employed with a matching gift company, please contact your company’s human resources department for instructions.

To learn more about gift opportunities, please contact the Office of Development at (866) 512-1690 or visit www.spelman.edu.

Light Bearer
Ernestine Brazeal, C’63
After I joyfully made it possible for a young Kenyan woman to come to Atlanta and complete four years of study at Spelman, I became dedicated to giving back to the College. Many of my gifts are relatively small, but the opportunity to consistently give really lights me up. I know each dollar counts and, placed with other dollars, becomes significant in supporting my dear alma mater.

Fearless Leader
Deborah Owin, C’2008
Spelman embraced and cultivated me at a critical time in my life, molding me into a well-educated, civically engaged, fearless leader with an international network of Spelman sisters. Working to prevent global gender inequality since graduating reminds me daily that giving back our time, talents and finances is key to keeping the gates of Spelman open for future generations of women. I will continue to give back each and every year.

In Memory of Taronda Spencer, C’80

Spelman appreciates the many who have given in memory of Taronda Spencer, the College’s late archivist and historian. She was cherished and respected for her love of Spelman, her extensive knowledge of the College’s history, and the extent to which she would go to ensure our institution’s legacy was accurately documented, accessible, and relevant for the campus community and the world.

Harold Bell, Director of Career Planning and Development

I am a consistent, committed donor to Spelman because I know I am investing in the promising future of a global-minded woman of color. In my 12-year tenure as the College’s director of Career Planning and Development, I have seen phenomenal organizations and institutions compete for our exceptional students. Great organizations align themselves with each other, which inspires me to do my part, aligning myself with the greatness that is Spelman.
